

The situation in Australia:

- Half the eight states and territories have no laws regarding assisted reproductive technology – and therefore no laws on donor conceived (DC) people having any right to information
- In the other four states, access to information depends on a whole range of factors including a DC person's age, whether your records even exist, whether you have your commissioning parents' permission, and whether you know you're DC
- The quality and quantity of information available about your biological family is extremely inconsistent
